SCHOOL REPORT.

Eleven schools have been had in the town during the past year, in as many different places. In several of them, as heretofore, the number of scholars has been very few. Whether the town continues the present school system, or reverts to the former one, the question of the reduction of the number of schools should receive consideration. The more schools the less schooling. With a decreasing population and a lessening valuation the present state of things is liable to grow worse instead of better. We must cut our garment according to the cloth.

In accordance with the law of the State providing for the supplying of books, the School Board examined text books of various publishers, selected such as seemed best adapted to our schools, provided covers, stamped and distributed to the different teachers,—a matter requiring a large amount of time and labor. This law is highly advantageous in this that it secures conformity in text books throughout the town, and prevents frequent and unnecessary changes. It has also disadvantages. Pupils are less likely to be careful of their books if they cost themselves or their parents nothing. Books are liable to be lost, by evil-minded persons breaking into the school house in vacation and carrying them off, as has happened in a neighboring town. Pupils need their books at home, not only after school during session, but during vacation also. To allow this would require a large amount of trouble to the teachers and School Board to keep an oversight of them. Moreover there are some books that pupils need after school days for reference, and to refresh their minds, as the arithmetic, geography and history, and it is better for them to own them. It has occurred to me that these disadvantages may be remedied in a great measure, if it should seem best; every person to whom a book is supplied to deposit with the School Board a sum of money equal to the value of the book as a security for the same while it is in his possession, at home or in school, said money to be refunded on the return of the book, less any damage it may have received. Then if the person shall desire to retain the book nothing further need be done; if otherwise, the safe keeping of it will be saved to the town until its return. If this method be adopted the books will be mostly under the care and supervision of parents at home, where they will be of use to their children, and not be stowed away in isolated school houses exposed to damage and loss.

The schools have been attended with very good success, and the teachers have given very general satisfaction. The one at the Branch was shortened somewhat by the prevalence of mumps among the pupils, and the one at the Hollow by the illness of the teacher.

The books, for want of suitable closets in the school houses, have been left with responsible parties near by for safe keeping during vacation. A very few have been sold.

I have noticed a tendency among pupils, and one often fostered by teachers and parents, to hurry into the higher grades of text books before they have thoroughly mastered the lower. This has been the more observable this year, when the books have cost them nothing. But this is not the way to make the greatest real progress. The primary reader, the primary arithmetic, the primary geography should be thoroughly learned before entering upon the second grade. When a pupil has learned to pronounce correctly and at sight all the words in a reader of a particular grade, then is the time, so thinks the pupil, so thinks the teacher, so thinks the parent, to enter upon the next grade. But no! The pupil is just ready then to begin to learn to read in that book. I mean to read properly, with due attention to pauses, tones, inflections, emphasis, expression, etc. And when our scholar shall have learned to read thus properly in the first, second, third, and fourth readers now in our schools, they need not to call on the town for a higher reader. They can read with propriety in any book, and had better devote their time and attention to something else. I found pupils in one school wearing out their patience, and that of their teachers, in trying to work examples in multiplication in the second arithmetic before they had completely learned the multiplication table in the first. Of course they could make but little headway. They should have been kept a longer time in the latter.

In the early history of the country, parents were required to teach their children at home, The school was intended to supplement this instruction. But as usually happens, people are not inclined to do for themselves what others will do for them, and so the whole matter of education has come to be relegated mainly to the school. It would be well at this day if parents would encourage their children to pursue their studies at home as well as in school, assisting them as far as they may. But for this they need their books at home, and I would recommend the plan I have suggested to secure them.

Respectfully submitted.

The 100 Cents in a Dollar.

The shrewd farmer everywhere seeks fertilizers that will increase his crops and so enlarge his income. He not only demands one hundred cents' worth of plant-food in every dollar's worth of fertilizer that he purchases, but his investment must also pay a handsome dividend in the increased value of his crops. The state chemists report a high valuation on our goods, but the highest valuations that we receive are from the farmers themselves, who have used our goods and who know, therefore, whereof they speak.

The thoughtful farmer will notice the state reports do not give the agricultural of the fertilizers, whereas the agricultural value only value which benefits the growing plant. these facts: —

1. A State

valuation does not tell from what source the of plant-food are derived. For example : it does nitrogen in blood any higher than nitrogen in yet nitrogen in blood is a most valuable plant-food, nitro gen in leather is almost worthless.

2. A State valuation does not take into account the proportions of plant-foods in the fertilizer. This, however, is of vital importance to the plant in promoting its growth.

The progressive farmer will always purchase the Bradley Fertilizers because they are composed of the best materials, combined in those proportions that experience has shown produce the largest crops. *We will send you on application "Bradley's American Farmer," which will tell you all about our fertilizers, and give you the reasons for their great success.
